WASHINGTON, SATURDAY EVENING, JUNE 22, 1889.

A TALK WITH F. K. WARD

Lonely-His Wife and Son Visit Him at the Jail-Adler's Condition About

In cell 102, down in the jail on the bank of the Eastern Branch, is the man that all Washington knows and has been talking about the past three days. Half of the part of Washington that gets about town at all is personally acquainted with him and everybody has been interested in the unfortunate occurrence that brought Frank Ward to jail. There has probably never been a man in Washington in private life who was better known or who has filled so much space in the news columns of the much space in the news columns of the newspapers with his doings. Always liked, always surrounded with friends. always surrounded with friends, always a prominent figure in local af-fairs, the spectacle of Frank Ward in a cell, shaking hands with his friends through prison bars, is an untoward

About 11 o'clock this morning a natty buggy, drawn by a trim sorrel horse with a gold "W" on his bridle, was driven up the gravel road in front of the red-stone jail building by a manly boy in Knickerbockers. Beside the boy in the carriage was a handsome woman with dark hair, and a worried look in her blue eyes. The boy pulled up the spirited sorrel beside the door, sprang out and pulled the horse's head over to one side so that his mother could get out without brushing her About 11 o'clock this morning could get out without brushing her handsome brown dress against the

It was Mrs. Ward, and she went up to the gloomy doorway with almost a smile on her face. She and her son were admitted and an attendant was sent to bring Mr. Ward. He was lying listlessly on his cot in his cell when they told him his wife was waiting to see him, and his face brightened as he got up and walked sprightlily out past the rows of cells and through the door in the iron cage to the parlor in the jail office. it was Mrs. Ward, and she went up

He put on his cherriest manner, and Mrs. Ward seemed to try to appear as little worried as possible. The boy realized that his father was in serious trouble, but the manly little fellow put on as brave a face as he could, and sat quietly by as his father and mother talked quietly together. The boy brought down an alligator satchel with some clothes and a couple of flannel shirts in it for his father. The inter-view lasted nearly an hour, and when Mrs. Ward went out to get into the buggy to be driven back there were tears in her pleasant eyes. The boy un-hitched the horse, got in beside his mother and the two drove away without either saying a word.

Mr. Ward's cell is a double one, the last one in the west row of the thirdstory tier. It is directly over the one occupied by Callinan the murderer, and there are but a few prisoners in the tier. Most of them are boys, and Mr. Ward's cell is about the quietest in the jail. The cell is a very comfortable sort of a room, being the size of two ordinary cells, and Mr. Ward spends most of his time in it, not having yet most of his time in it, not having yet taken advantage of the exercise hours. He sleeps a good deal, or lies on his cot as if asleep, and sits silently in his one chair as if thinking deeply.

He has a great many callers, more than any other prisoner in the jail, and sees most of them. His appearance is not that of an apprehensive man, though he looks very much worried over what he speaks of as the unfortunate affair. When friends call to see him, as they do almost constantly during the visitors' hours, he comes to him, as they do almost constantly during the visitors' hours, he comes to the cage and talks to them through the iron network, or else is let out and

He welcomes people with the same whole-souled, genial air that has al-ways made him friends, though quietly. e talks freely with them, but does not say much about his case. He told a Curric reporter this morning that the treated him very so far as the rules permitted, letting him see his friends when they came. He appreciates one kindness very highly, and spoke of it feelingly. When to see them in the quiet, homelike jail parlor, and she has never seen the iron bars that make him a prisoner, so that the unpleasantness of his situation is softened to her as much as possible.

'I don't know that I care to say any thing particularly, 'he said to a Chiric reporter this morning, 'except to thank my friends who have been so kind to me. And another thing I wish you would do is to correct the statemen would do is to correct the statement that I used the word 'Jew,' as I was quoted as having used it Tuesday night. I didn't make use of any such expression. Why, I never even knew that the young man I shot was a Jew. I was never well acquainted with him and had only heard him called Maurice. And when they told me the next morning in the Station House that L had shot the son of my old friend Henry Adler, I was all broken up. I have known his father and done business with him for years, and I always liked and respected him.

"Why, just a short while before this thing happened I had met this young man's father, Henry Adler, on the street up by the Treasury De-partment. I was in my wagon going up to look at the broken canal when I met him, and I stopped and asked him to get in and go with me. He was busy and could not go and I drove on alone.

"I have been trying think since I have been here if I ever, in my life, had any trouble with a Jew, at not remember that I ever had. been associated with them in business and socially, too, all my life almost, and I have always found them very great many friends among them now and I never in my life used the word 'Jew' disparagingly. "These words that have been attrib-"These words that have been attrib-uted to me are not the least unpleasant part of this unfortunate affair. It was all an accident my having the pistol with me that night. I never carried a pistol, never had use for one. My friends have all been very kind to me since I have been here. To think that this young man is the son of Henry Adler, who I have been a friend of for years, it is terrible. His nucle, Victor Adler, and I have always been warm Adler, and 1 have always been warm business friends, and they are all the business friends, and they are all the niecal sort of people."

Mr. Ward, although he talked quietly and calmly, is visibly worried.

He wears a flannel shirt and straw hat, and, save what his wife and boy and friends bring him, he lives on the ordinary prison fare and doesn't complain. He seems in good health and is as well satisfied with his surroundings as ke could expect to be. The jail offi cials all say that he is bearing up well and is very quiet. He is kept informed of Adler's condition and reads the local papers every day. He is given, as the other prisoncrsure, an hour every day for exercise, though he has not yet taken advantage of it, being too busy with his callers, some one being at the jail to see him nearly all the time. As far as is known he sleeps well and his apperite has not failed.

Adler's condition was unchanged this Adler's condition was unchanged this afternoon. The doctors see no reason to change their opinion that he cannot live, and his death is but a question of time. Much sympathy is expressed for Ward; no one that has known him is able to understand how he could have been guilty of such an act. He is a member of the Masons, the Elks and other societies and his friends among these organizations and among the genthese organizations and among the gen cral public are warm in their expres sions of regret.

LATE DEPARTMENT NEWS.

A Remarkable Pension Case.

Assistant Secretary Bussey has rendered a decision in a remarkable pension case on an appeal for re-rating and increase of pension. It appears from the records that the claimant, Richard Whiting of Company C. Thirty-third Infantry, was wounded at Tupelo, Miss., about July 14, 1864, and while lying on the field of battle in a helpless condition received a sunstroke, which, soon after discharge, caused chronic nervous prostration and impairment of mind, resulting in imbeelility and dementia as early as 1874. The wife and guardian of the claimant filed an application for pension in 1883, which was granted, the rate heing $24 per month, payment to begin from date of filing the application. Subsequently, in 1885, the pension was increased to $50 per month. The claim came before Assistant Secretary Bussey upon an appeal filed by the pensioner's wife and guardian, the ground of contention being that the insance pensioner had not been adequately rated under the statutes applicable to the case, and that instead of the pension beginning at the date of filing the original application, in 1883, it should begin at the date of the pensioner's dischurge, inasmuch as the limitations contained in the Arrears of Pension act, approved March 3, 1879, expressly excepts from the operation of it all "claims by or in behalf of Insane persons and children under 16 years of age."

Assistant Secretary Bussey holds that this exceptional provision is applied to Whiting's claim, and hence allows him arreara from the date of discharge. In addition to this feature of the claim the fact appears that since about 1878 the pensioner has been in a condition that has required "the personal sid and attendance of another person," he having, soon after 1874, become helpless from mental inability, and from partial paralysis of one side, due to sun stroke and guar-shot wound incurred in the service; and the Assistant Secretary based ecided that claimant's disability entitled him not only to arrears but a re-rating and increas A Remarkable Pension Case.

ous and false information, the claimant's pension was reduced to the meagre rate of 38 per month. The decision of Assistant Secretary Bussey applies the law thereto by a careful construction of its terms, and evidently rights a flagrant injustice to a veteran who served in 105 battles and skirmishes during the war.

Cameron is unconscious. His physi-cians express the opinion that his great vitality may sustain life for a few days yet. At noon he partially regained consciousness and seemed to recognize his attendants, but could not speak. Simon Cameron was born in Lancas-ter County, Pa., March 8, 1799. He was left an orphian at an early age, but received a fair English education and began to learn the printer's trade when 9 years of age. He worked as a jour-neyman in Lancaster, Harrisburg and Washington, and so improved his op-portunities that in 1820 he was editing a newspaper in Doylestown, Pa., and in 1822 one in Harrisburg. As soon as he had accumulated sufficient capital he became interested in banking and in railroad construction in the central part of the State. He was for a time adju-tant-general of Pennsylvania.

He was elected to the United States

He was elected to the United States Senate in 1845 for the term ending in 1849, and during this period acted with the Democrats on important party questions, such as the Missouri Compromise bill. This was repealed in 1854, and Mr. Cameron became identified with the "people's party," subsequently merged with the Republicans. As its candidate he was re-elected to the Senate for the full term of six years, beginning in 1859, a period that covered beginning in 1850, a period that co the exciting crisis of secession. I this time he was so carnest an advocate of peace that his loyalty was suspected.

At the Soldiers' Home.

The Soldiers' Home Temperance Union hold their regular weekly meetings each Friday evening. Last evening they held a large and enthusiastic meeting. Miss Julia Lockwood rendered some touching recitations, which were liberally applauded. Her youthful, innocent face carried the old veterans back to their childhood days, when family ties were not broken and reminded them of some sweetheart, who, perhaps, has long since passed over to the great grand army, there to await the final roll-call. Her performances were rewarded by many beautiful flowers. Mrs. Emma Bergman sang several beautiful solos and recited some of her best selections. She had to get the assistance of her mother to bring off the flowers that were showered upon her. The practical work of the evening was done by Miss Chase and Dr. C. N. Whitney. Dr. Whitney made one of his fine practical temperance addresses, which was frequently inferrupted by hearty applates. Miss Chase addresses dithe meeting in her usual kindly way. The Dealers in New York Generally Discredit the Rumer.

New York, June 22.—Rumors that a gigantle coal trust is in process of formation stirred up Wall street yesterday and are generally regarded as not at all improbable. Some brokers said that an English syndicate had been formed to buy up all the coal companies and to guarantee individual operators who would join the trust a profit of twenty-five cents per too on all coal mined.

Another report was that the alleged syndicate is entirely American and that Austin Corbin and Samuel Sloan are back of it.

At the offices of the various coal roads nobody could be found who was willing to talk about the proposed coal trust. It is believed that the efforts which are now being made to break the Reading voling trust are inspired by the syndicate, who can better carry the plan into effect with the Reading shares scattered. It would take an immense capital to carry out the stehem. The market value or the stock of the great coal ing shares scattered. If would take an im-mense capital to carry out the scheme. THE KILRAIN-SULLIVAN FIGHT. The Battle Ground To Be Pitched

New Abita Springs, La.

New Orleans, June 22.—It is atated by these who know that arrangements have been made for the Sullivan-Kilrain fight and the ground for the battle agreed upon. It will be near Abita Springs, on the line of the East Louisiana Ralfroad, in St. Tammany parish. For a month past the officials of the Queen & Crescent and the Fast Louisiana roads have been working hard to have the fight come off near the Springs and officred such inducements and facilities for the transportation of crowds that the managers of Kilrain, who had the choice of grounds, accepted the offer submitted to them. The East Louisiana Ralfroad people were especially interested in having the fight take place near the Springs on account of the advertisement it would give that resort, and Messrs. Pottevent and Favre offered to creet an amphitheatre on the battle ground capable of seating 2,000 people. The people of St. Tammany agree that there shall be no interference and no intmidation; a fair fight and the best man to win.

A Heartless Piece of Cruelty.

LONDON, June 22.—The many political prisoners at present confined in the Irish jalls are dealed access to the daily newspapers, and not a scrap of information from the outside world is permitted to reach their cells. Some indignation is caused here by the revelation of the cruel extreme to which this rule is enforced. By the special direction of the judges of the special commission court now in session. special direction of the judges of the special commission court now in session, Mr. John O'Connor and Mr. Condon, two of the incarcerated Irish agitators, were ordered to be supplied with reports of the evidence. The reports they got were cut from the newspapers, and what was their mortification on receiving the cuttings to find that the backs of them were pasted over with brown paper so that the prisoners should have no chance of reading a stray paragraph of news telling them what was going on in the outer world. A Home Rule Member of Parliament announces his intention of calling the attention of the Government, through a question in the House, to this piece of heartless cruelty.

A REMARKABLE STORY.

AN IMPORTANT WITNESS IN THE

He Declares That He Saw the Trunk Containing the Doctor's Remains Put

Into the Wagon and Afterward

Dumped Into the Catch Basin. Chicago, June 22.—An important witness in the Cronin case has turned up. He is George E. Brooks, a newsagent running on one of the railroads coming in at the Union depot. His story is to the effect that the night of May 4, he was driving in Lake View with his sweetheart, and that happening along Asbland avenue, he saw three men loading the trunk into the wagen at the Carison cottage, and that wagon at the Carlson cottage, and that about half an hour later he saw the same men dumping the contents of the trunk into the each basin in which the body of Dr. Cronin was found. He also says that he saw the men distinctly and that he will be able to identify them; and that his female companion also saw them, and that she, too, will be also saw them, and that she, too, will be able to inentify them. He is ready to able to inentify them. He is ready to produce the young woman as soon as the authorities want her.

Brooks' explanation of his failure to tell his story before is that he was afraid of losing his life, as he believed the men concerned in the murder were so desperate they would kill any one who they thought might turn up as a witness against them. He said the knowledge he possessed had so weighed on his mind that he could not keep it to himself any longer, and believing it was a duty he owed himself and the community, he had at last decided to tell all he had seen. He first stipulated that he be given protection. This was that he be given protection. This was promised him. His story was partially told at the Deplaines-Street Station about 9 o'clock last night. Its importance was appreciated at once, and the man was sent to Chief Hubbard, with whom he was closeted until nearly midnight. He described the three mea whom he saw, and his description of one is said to fit Burke, the Winnipeg prisoner.
